THE MILL NEVER GRINDS

Passed.

But the Hoarders of Absolute Money,

Who Have Kept It Concealed from Public View, May Reap a Decided Benefit by Placing It in Circulation Now.

There are discounts and then again there are discounts and again we have chromes and jewelry prizes, guessing matches and other inducements; well might the Bard of Avon rail against the fruitless of money and pathetically exclaim: "What fools these mortals be!" in their mad chase after the almighty dollar! A pertinent illustration of how mankind may realize a direct benefit from a bona fide reduction of prices (already the lowest in the market) may be found in the following statement involving an actual occurrence and a smattering of arithmetic: A well-known gentleman, wishing to take advantage of the glittering inducements offered by certain clothing houses of the city, started out to invest in an overcoat and reap the benefit of the discounts so temptingly held out to close buyers. In one large concern $20 was asked for a certain style and grade of overgarment just reduced 10 per cent; a few doors further along $35 was asked for the self-same garment, recently cut down from $45. He concluded to prosecute his search still further; and, on visiting Famous, found the identical, same grade and make of coat at $5, regular price now reduced by our own fourth of $15.75. His remark was brief and to the point: "Well, it pays to look around!
I'll call again." And that is just what we'd like to have every consumer, clothing, shoes, hats, and great! furnishing goods in St.
Louis do—investigate these called stupendous reductions so liberally advertised all over St.
Louis, and come to Famous.

LEADING NEW YORK PHYSICIANS DISCUSS HYDROPHOBIA AND ITS PREVENTION.

Special Meeting of the Clinical Society of the Post Graduate Medical School—Dr. Wm. A.
Hammond's Views—Well-Authenticated Cases of Hydrophobia Rare—A Catholic Priest's Cure.

By Telegram to the Post-Dispatch.

New York, January 26.—The Clinical society of the Post Graduate medical school held a special meeting in the lecture-room at No. 228 East Twentieth street last night for the discussion of hydrophobia and its prevention. Dr.
D. B. St. John Rossa presided. Dr. Wm. A.
Hammond led the discussion. Dr. Hammond said that though the medical profession is familiar in a degree with hydrophobia, its origin and method of transmission from one subject to another are so imperfectly understood and the number of well-authenticated cases from which to collect data for its study is so small, that a comprehensive discussion of the disease, its treatment and the best method of prevention was not what he proposed to enter into. It is known that there is such a disease, and that once developed it is incurable.
Beyond these facts medical science has made but little progress, and consequently he would confine himself as closely as possible to cases that had come within his knowledge and bitterly regretted that he had not been able to speak of thirteen cases; six of these developed symptoms of the disease in less than thirty days, four in between thirty and forty days, and one after 108 days. Other authorities were quoted bringing the total of supposed cases up to 84, of which 35 of the cases occurred within the first month, and only twenty after a period of six months. In the speaker's opinion, after the lapse of one year after the bite the bitten person is absolutely safe. Statistics provided in all reports of cases of disease from hydrophobia after such a period have been found to be trustworthy. The primary cause of the disease, he said, was not certainly a virus, but a virus, or at most, were uncertain. The majority of cases of so-called hydrophobia, he said, were purely imaginary, resulting from the fear of the disease. He said that he had seen several cases of the disease, one, a lawyer, who fancied every autumn that he felt an approach of hydrophobia, from the fear of a dog bite. He had been bitten by a dog, and he had been bitten
